

Diploma thesis „Greek electoral system. Inspiration for the Czech Republic?“ deals with development of electoral rules in Greece since transition to democracy in 1974 until 2009. Its aim is to analyze all variants of the electoral system, which occurred during this period, especially in terms of proportionality and impact on the party system. Thesis concerns itself with influence of particular variables of electoral system (district magnitude, electoral formula, legal threshold and ballot structure). Findings are used for comparison with the latest proposal of Czech electoral reform (so called “Greek variant”). Efforts were made to reveal the common characteristics of the Greek system and the Czech proposal and also to assess the benefits of this proposal and its potential shortcomings.
